If the Hebraical Reader will give himself the trouble to observe and pursue these short Directions, he will find his pains in a little time sufficiently and amply rewarded. For he will be led hereby to discover and to correct many Errors in the Hebrew Text, which no other method of proceeding can so effectually enable him to perform. Nor is the benefit of the English Reader left wholly unregarded. If he compares the parallel passages together, great light will break in upon him; and what might appear obscure in a single view, will often become, when read in conjunction with its correspondent article, clear and perspicuous.

S E C T I O N I.

T may now be assumed as an allowed Maxim — That the Hebrew Scriptures have not reached us in that pure and perfect state, in which they were originally written — That they have undergone indeed many great and grievous Corruptions, occasioned by the ignorance or negligence of Transcribers.

Since then it is acknowledged, that Errours and Mistakes of various kinds have thus crept into the present Text, the grand question is — By what means are these Corruptions to be now discovered, removed, and rectified? In answer to which it may justly be alledged, that we are providentially supplied with various means, which eminently contribute to this purpose.

But

But of all these means I shall at present insist only on one; which, though the most obvious, and most determinate of all others, has yet been somehow strangely overlooked; or at least applied in a very imperfect manner.

Now that peculiar method, which I would here be understood chiefly to recommend, as well for the discovery, as the correction of Errors, is—to compare together, in the Hebrew Text, the several correspondent passages of Scripture;—noting their differences;—and then adopting those particular readings, which best agree with the tenour of the context, and the rules of grammar. For the Hebrew is a very simple, and a very grammatical language: the anomalous words, observable therein, being, I think, for the most part, nothing else but the errors of transcribers*.

* How many words, anomalous in the Hebrew Pentateuch, are right and grammatical in the Samaritan! See Gen. xxiv. 14, 16, 28, 55, 57; xxxiv. 3, 12, &c. where the false Hebrew חַנְעָר is, universally in the Samaritan, as it ought to be, חַנְעָרָה. So Gen. xlix. 20, where the Hebrew has שְׁמֹנֶה, the Samaritan reads truly שְׁמִנֵּי. Thus again, Numb. xi. 15, where the Hebrew reads פְּנָא, feminine, with a masculine participle, the Samaritan has אַתָּא, as the Rules of Grammar, and the sense of the Context, require. See also Deut. v. 27. But of such instances there is no end. Nevertheless, this language, as every other, has, it must be owned, its peculiar Idioms.—And therefore every deviation from the common Rules must not be looked upon as Faults. But the Idioms are easily discoverable.

The correspondent or parallel passages of Scripture will be found, on examination, far more numerous, ample, and various, than most Readers could, at first, conceive. These double or repeated passages may justly be looked upon as different Copies of the same Original—Copies of undoubted antiquity; and of venerable authority: to the value, credit, and importance of which, no objections can be rationally offered.

If these Copies then, or, to speak more properly, these parallel places were carefully consulted, and compared together, the judicious Reader might easily collect such an ample store of Hebrew Criticisms, as would not only do honour to his parts and learning; but also prove of infinite service to the cause of Religion, by correcting the Errours, and supplying the Defects, of the present Text—making one part of it subservient to the rectification and improvement of another. And the improvements thus made must necessarily appear the more satisfactory, as they were made by the light which Scripture affords, and stand confirmed by Scripture-authority.

Now as these parallel or similar passages are of different sorts; and lie dispersed far and wide from each other; it may be of use to class them under proper Heads; and then subjoin the several particulars, under those Heads, in one united view before the Reader.—This will contribute not a little to the Author's ease, whilst it serves to expedite the Reader's researches.

The CLASSES to which the parallel or correspondent passages of Scripture may be reduced, are these:

1°. Genealogical Registers, Muster-Rolls, &c. doubly inserted.

2°. Historical Narrations repeated,

3°. Sentiments, Messages, &c. twice recited.

4°. Quotations made by one Prophet from another.

5°. Quotations or Repetitions borrowed by the same Prophet from himself.

Of these in their order. And first of Genealogical Registers, &c.

S E C T I O N II.

Genealogical Registers are almost coeval with mankind; and made, in primitive times, the principal part of their history. The distinction of the two Lines in the antediluvian state rendered them of great importance. From the old world Noah conveyed them to his posterity in the new: And, by the division he made of the earth, laid his sons under a kind of necessity to register their descendants in the same manner.

After the ratification of the Abrahamic Covenant, these Registers became, whether considered in a religious or civil light, of still greater importance to the Jews; that is, to the sons of Jacob. In a religious view, view, they were proofs (conjointly with other circumstances) of the accomplishment of the prophecies, promises, and threatenings, relating to the different tribes. And, in a civil light, they were their Title-Deeds to their several Rights, Inheritances, and Possessions. Hence then we may conclude, that the Jews were no less exact in drawing them up, than they were careful in preserving them *. And preserve them, we know, they did, even through the confusions of the Babylonish Captivity—as plainly appears from the express mention that is made of them by Nebemiah, ch. vii. 5.

Under this HEAD the Reader may compare

1. Gen. v. 3—32. with 1 Chron. i. 1—4.
2. Gen. x. 2—4. . . . 1 Chron. i. 5—7.
3. Gen. x. 6—8, 13—18. 1 Chron. i. 8—16.
4. Gen. x. 22—29. . . . 1 Chron. i. 17—23.
5. Gen. xi. 10—26. . . . 1 Chron. i. 24—27.
6. Gen. xxv. 2—4. . . . 1 Chron. i. 32, 33.
7. Gen. xxv. 13—16. . . . 1 Chron. i. 29—31.
8. Gen. xxxvi. 10—14. • 1 Chron. i. 35—37.
9. Gen. xxxvi. 20—28. . 1 Chron. i. 38—42.
10. Gen. xxxvi. 31—39. : 1 Chron. i. 43—50.
11. Gen. xxxvi. 40—43. : 1 Chron. i. 51—54.

* See 1 Chron. ix. 1. And yet it must be confessed, there are great and amazing differences between them, as they now occur in different parts of Scripture. This article deserves serious attention.

This series the Critic may extend at pleasure, by the help of those References which are placed in the margin of our English Bibles.—I shall only subjoin

12. 2 Sam. xxiii. 8—39. . . 1 Chron. xi. 10—47.

13. Ezra, ii. 1—70. . . . Nehem. vii. 6—73.

It lies not within my System to note the Variations, that occur in these passages; or to make Remarks upon them. That work I leave and recommend to those, who are happily endowed with more leisure, and disposed to try their skill this way.

If, when they come to make the trial, they should find themselves greatly surprized at the frequent mistakes; which appear in the PROPER NAMES*; they will, I believe, be no less pleased at being able to account for their Rise and Production. The misapprehension of similar Letters was certainly the cause of many Errors: other circumstances will account for more. But there is one circumstance (I mean that of the Transcriber's casting his eye, when the same word occurred twice in a short compass, on the wrong place) that has unhappily produced more grievous Errors than all the rest put together—causing, if the wrong word stood first, a needless repetition of what followed it; and if last, an injurious omission of the words preceding it. An instance of this latter sort may be seen in N° 4. of the preceding series. In the genealogy of the line of SHEM we read Genesis x. 22, 23. וְאֶרְם֙: וּבָנָיו אֶרְם עֹז וְנוּן i.e. “And ARAM: and the children of ARAM; “Uz, &c.” And this was doubtless the reading of the original Copy in Chronicles *. But some careless Transcriber, fixing his eye on the last ARAM instead of the first, left out the intermediate words; and thereby confounded the four following grandsons of Shem with his sons—And from such a Transcript the present Text was unluckily printed off.

Compare also, with the like view of discovering the Differences of the Names of Places,

Other Instances (for they are almost endless) the attentive Reader will easily collect; especially from the Journeys of the Israelites in the wilderness.

The variations of the NUMBERS, which are very remarkable in the Chapters referred to in the last line of the series, must be accounted for on other principles. But what those principles are, that will fairly and completely account for them, have not, I think, been yet discovered †.

* This is evident, 1^o. from the exact conformity between these passages, elsewhere, throughout. And, 2^o. from the Arabic Version of this very place in Chronicles.

† Dr. KENNICOTT has made great advances towards it in his first Dissertation, p. 96, &c. to which I refer the Reader.

S E C T I O N III.

THE Historical Accounts of the Jewish state, drawn up by Prophets or inspired Pen-men, were carefully deposited in the archives of the Kingdom — first in the Tabernacle, and then in the Temple: ready to be produced and recited to the people, when they met together on the days of assembly. This I suppose to have been the case, because I cannot otherwise understand, how their authenticity could be well ascertained. But when they appeared in the hand-writing of their several authors, or that of their scribes, the proof of their genuineness stood clear and incontestable. From these archetypal Copies were the several Books of Samuel, Kings, Chronicles, &c. successively transcribed:—but with what exactness will easily appear to any person, who gives himself the trouble to examine and collate the following PARALLELS, viz.

Here

Here is an ample field for the learned Critic to expatiate in: and here is likewise matter sufficient to exercise his keenest judgment. And, if he has patience enough to allow judgment its perfect work, he will be possessed in time of a noble Collection of useful, Biblical Remarks.

In forming these Remarks, he must by no means look upon all Variations as lapses or mistakes of Transcribers. Many of them are only different Expressions of the same things—and probably copied from different Accounts. For several Authors, as appears from the References made to them*, were often employed in writing the History of the same Reign. And therefore it is not unlikely, that the Compilers of the Books of Kings and Chronicles (which Books are evidently Compendiums of larger Accounts) should follow the diction, sometimes of one, and sometimes of another Copy, that lay before them, as best suited their stile or purpose:—From whence it is easy to account for those different phraseologies, which occur in passages otherwise correspondent: Though something, perhaps, should be likewise attributed to the genius of the Compilers themselves; who, while they retained the substance of the History, were at full liberty to vary and change the mode of expression, according to their own pleasure. And yet, this liberty, it is plain, they used but very sparingly.

For it is further to be observed, that though there were extant several Histories of the same Reigns; yet ONE of them seems to have been always held in higher Estimation than all the rest. From these most approved accounts of every Reign were the Histories we now have chiefly extracted. That the Authors of Kings and Chronicles copied from the same Originals, is evident from the thread and texture of the narration—from that glaring uniformity of iction, that runs, in the main, through them. And what deference they paid to those Originals, is manifest from the agreement that subsists between them: neither of them presuming to deviate from the Text or approved Copy; unless the explanation of certain circumstances required them to take in, here and there, a select part of the other Histories, that had been written in the same Reign.

There is one Difference indeed between the Language of Chronicles and Kings, respecting the ineffable Name of God, which is apparently owing to design; and favours not a little of superstition. The Difference I mean is, that the name יהוה in Kings is often changed in the correspondent places of Chronicles into אלהים. At what time this Superstition of substituting אלהים, &c. for יהוה began to take place among the Jews, I cannot pretend to say. Perhaps some time before the Captivity. After the Captivity it is generally supposed to have grown upon them; and to have induced them to suppress this sacred name more frequently than before. An Hypothesis, which I cannot readily embrace, and for this reason —because I observe the word יהוָה to occur as often in the books written after the Captivity, as in those that were penned before it. See particularly, EZRA and MALACHI.

But nevertheless, there is, I must own, one peculiarity in EZRA and NEHEMIAH, which still seems to favour the foregoing Hypothesis. And the peculiarity consists in this—that what other Authors, even those who wrote after the Captivity *, generally stile יהוָה, these express by בֵּית הַאֱלֹהִים, almost continually throughout their works. Is it a Chaldaic idiom? EZEKIEL often uses אָדָנִי, where we might naturally expect he would have used יהוָה,—And EZEKIEL was a Captive in Babylon.

Let me add here, as in a kindred place, another peculiarity, confined to a book nearly of the same date—which is, that the NAME OF GOD is not so much as once mentioned through the whole Book of ESTHER, as it stands in the Hebrew. A peculiarity the more striking, the more we consider the Circumstances of the Story.—What conclusion the Reader may draw from it, with respect to that Book, is left to his own judgment. And his judgment of it will not, I imagine, be the more favourable, because he sees the supposed defects of the Hebrew Text so amply supplied by the insertions made in the Grecian Version.

It is the general Opinion of the Jewish Church, and adopted by the Christian, that the Books of Kings and Chronicles were composed by the same hand; viz. by EZRA. But are not the fore-mentioned Differences, respecting the name of God (supposing them to have subsisted in the first Copies) plain, internal proofs of the falsity of this Opinion? Supposing them, I say, to have subsisted so early. But, to speak freely my mind, I strongly suspect, that they are of a much later date; and took their rise from the foolish superstition of comparatively modern Jews. A superstition that seems to have had some effect not only on these later Historical Books, but also on the Psalms, and even on the Pentateuch: for the Hebrew has now the word אלהים in several places through the Books of MOSES, where the Samaritan Text reads יהוה.

S E C T I O N IV.

Certain Psalms, Precepts, Sentiments, Messages, &c. are, for their importance and other reasons, often repeated in Scripture. Let it suffice to insert the following Examples:

Exod. xx. 2—17.	.	Deut. v. 6—21.
Levit. xi. 2—19.	.	Deut. xiv. 4—18.

Psalm lx. 5—12.	.	Psalm cviii. 6—13.
Psalm lxxx. 3, 7, 19.	.	Psalm cvii. 8, 15, 21, 31.
Psalm cxv. 4—8.	.	Psalm cxxxv. 15—18.

Having delivered this Specimen, I shall leave the Reader to enlarge the Catalogue at his leisure. If he takes in the smaller Sentences, Proverbs will supply him with a good stock—and the Psalms with a larger. Numberless passages, from the former Books of MOSES, are repeated in Deuteronomy.

But it is of more importance to observe with respect to the whole Pentateuch, that the Samaritan is a duplicate of the Hebrew; and therefore of excellent use in adjusting the Text. Nevertheless the Reader must be cautioned not to depend too much on the

IN writing on the same or similar Subjects, the same ideas frequently occurred to different Prophets; arising, in all likelihood, from the same representation being spiritually impressed on their minds. Hence it is easy to account for that similar train of Thoughts, and those similar turns of Expression, which occur so often in the prophetic Writings. But the Prophets, not only make use of similar Expressions; but also, in some remarkable Predictions, copy one another's Words—as will evidently appear from an accurate Collation of the following Passages :

Some of these Passages, as they are often applied to different Subjects, Critics may perhaps look upon rather in the light of Adaptations, than in that of real and formal Quotations. But whatever light the Reader is pleased to take them in, let me entreat him to collate them carefully: for he will find, by experience, that they are of truly great and important service in confirming or correcting the parallel Texts—The passages I have omitted his diligence will supply.

S E C T I O N VI.

IF the Prophets quoted from one another, it can be no wonder, surely, that they often borrowed from themselves—or, to speak more accurately, that they were impressed with the same ideas, and consequently made use of the same language, on different occasions. All this, in reality, is nothing more than being occasionally consistent with themselves. And every instance of such Iteration is a proof, that the Book, in which they are contained, is the genuine work of the same hand.

Whether all these Repetitions were purposely made by the respective Authors themselves; or, whether

Some of them might not be unwarily inserted in two different places by the Collectors of the prophetic Writings, is a Question that deserves to be seriously considered. The fact, however, is certain; as will readily appear from the Collation of the following Texts:

Zechariah

Ch. iv. 5.	Ch. iv. 13.

There are many other short Repetitions dispersed through the several prophetic Writings, which I have not particularly specified. The Reader, however, would do well to investigate them; and pay a proper attention to them. For though short, they are often of great importance in correcting and settling the Text. Of this a curious Instance occurs in Ezek. xviii. ver. 25, compared with ver. 29. And also in Zechar. iv. ver. 5, compared with ver. 13. Many more, would my plan admit of it, might easily be produced: But I leave them to the Reader's diligence.

SECTION VII.

HAVING thus assisted the Hebraical Reader in collecting and assorting his materials; it remains now, that I proceed to direct him in the use and application of them.

When he has fixed on any Parallels, let him, first, carefully compare them together, and note down with exactness every Variation, that is observable between the Texts. Hereby many Corruptions may be discovered, and the true Readings restored.

But as it often happens that one Hebrew Text is not sufficient to correct its Parallel, both of them perhaps being equally faulty, then let him, 2dly, consult the ancient Versions with care, and see what assistance they may afford. For, as they were made from ancient Copies, they often lead to truer Readings than those inserted in the printed Text.

If these methods fail, let him, 3dly, use his judgment; applying to the Text the Rules of Grammar; and trying its sense by similar Phraseologies—not forgetting, that it may have been obscured by Glosses taken from the margin.

If the Text remains still embarrassed, then let him, lastly, consider—That the Words may have been transposed,

transposed, or improperly divided—That Letters may have been added, omitted, misplaced, or altered, &c. and accordingly endeavour to rectify the whole upon that Consideration.

And that he may be the better prepared for this difficult branch of Criticism, let me earnestly entreat him, to remark, and note down in a separate Book, all the Additions, Mutations, Transpositions, &c. of WORDS, and LETTERS, which he observes in collating the several Passages, according to the Scheme hereunto annexed — by casting his eye on which, he may be led to rectify an Error, that might otherwise puzzle him, and give him trouble.

The various Readings that may be collected (not to speak of the Errors that may be rectified) in this way, are full as numerous as they are important. And though, hitherto, they have been able to engage but little attention; yet I hope the time is coming on, when, for the credit of Learning, the support of Truth, and the perfection of the Hebrew Scriptures, some candid and ingenious Critic will take the pains to collect them together, and lay them before the public. In what form the Collation is to appear must be left to his own Judgment. That which Dr. KENNICOTT has exhibited in his first Dissertation, p. 19—247, is an exceeding good one; and, in some cases, well worthy of imitation. But, if it should be thought too prolix for the mere purpose of collating, I will venture to propose a more contracted Scheme, exemplified in the following SPECIMEN:

2 KINGS xxiv. 18, &c. and JEREMIAH lii. 1, &c.
compared according to the English Polyglott.

2 KINGS xxiv.

JEREMIAH lii.
